General Practice: Finding Financial Stability Amid Uncertainty

General Practice is under pressure—rising costs, staff shortages, and relentless patient demand, all while funding remains uncertain. But resilience is built into the DNA of primary care.

While we wait for promised support, there's power in focusing on what's within our control. This isn't just about cutting costs—it's about smarter working. Optimising income streams, tightening inefficiencies, and making the most of existing resources can make a real impact.

Maximising enhanced services and QoF income, improving coding, and streamlining recall systems all help practices hit targets and avoid financial leaks. Operational costs need scrutiny—are appointment templates aligned to demand? Are digital tools reducing admin or adding to the workload?

The reality is tough, but there are levers we can pull. Advocate for better funding, but don't wait for rescue. Take action, refine systems, and build financial resilience now. Hope isn't just about waiting—it's about making change happen.

Hello, I'm Nicky.

I am Head of Service Delivery at Enhanced Technology. My role involves ensuring the smooth delivery of our services and identifying opportunities for development and future improvements. I've been with the company for many years and am proud of the journey we've been on since the beginning.

Currently, I live in Cheltenham with my partner after returning from New Zealand, where we lived for two years. Outside of work, you'll probably find me playing some kind of sport, painting, or out on a walk in the Cotswolds.
